Translational Research

Staffed by medical faculty of the Emory University School of Medicine, Emory's interactive team of cardiovascular researchers uses knowledge gained in basic science research and applies it to clinical research. This process of connecting biological discoveries made in the laboratory with clinical research is called translational research – and it is crucial to the development of important new therapies, devices and protocols that directly impact patient care. The Center is the only program in Atlanta, and one of just a few in Georgia, to be involved in translational research, a fact that consistently propels Emory to the forefront of cutting-edge cardiovascular treatment and technology.

Superior Outcomes

As members of one of the leading heart teams in the Southeast, Emory Heart & Vascular Center physicians perform a high volume of specialized procedures. Scientific research shows there is a direct relationship between the number of procedures performed and the number of successful outcomes. Additionally, the Emory Center for Outcomes Research (ECOR) focuses on improving standard practice guidelines and clinical protocols in order to achieve the highest possible quality of care for patients with, or at risk for, cardiovascular disease.

Easy Access: 24 Hours, Every Day

Transferring your patient takes a single call from a physician's office, hospital or emergency response team. One call sets everything in motion. A specially trained operator completes patient demographic and clinical reports and forwards this information to the nursing, admission and pre-certification staff at Emory Crawford Long Hospital or Emory University Hospital. In addition, Emory Flight provides round-the-clock helicopter medical-transport services for patients who require urgent, specialized care. A specially trained and fully credentialed critical-care nurse and paramedic team provide quick access to an EMORY HEALTHCARE facility.
